FAMILY ROW IS AIRED

IN POLICE COURT SATURDAY. Jose Velasquez, arrested on a charge of being drunk and disturbing the peace, was dismissed when arraigned in police court Saturday morning. His face was badly battered up and blood had streamed down on his clothing. There was a long gash in his head and another on his nose. He said that he had quarreled with Jose Diaz, his wife's sister, because he would not work, and Diaz hit him with a beer bottle. The fracas occurred at their home on South Stanton street, near the corner of Fourth street.

World's Biggest Racing Yacht

New York, N. Y., April 22.—The biggest racing and ocean cruising yacht in the world has been launched from the yard of the Staten Island Shipbuilding company at Port Richmond, Staten Island. The yacht, which is owned by Robert E. Todd, a famous yachtsman and former commodore of the Atlantic Yacht club, will be called the Karina, and when completed will cost in the neighborhood of $200,000. It will be the most elaborate furnished yacht owned in this country. The Karina is 200 feet over all, with a water line of 150 feet; 24 feet beam; depth 20 feet 7 inches, and draught 18 feet. She will be equipped with three masts and will carry two launches. Ex-commodore Todd will use the Karina in racing events throughout the summer and in the winter will take her on a cruise to the Mediterranean.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox

On The Pathetic Little Brides Of India.

TO MEET four wedding processions in two hours is not an unusual experience at this season of the year in India. It happened to us, and two of the brides chanced to reach the temple where certain of the rites were to be performed at the same time, and it was our good fortune to be passing the temple at that moment, also.

The spectacle was a brilliant one. We had heard the shrill singing of the throngs of people as they approached and we had seen their rainbow hued garments from afar.

A hundred—possibly 200 people were in the first procession: men, women and children—mainly the last two. Marriage is a four or five days process in India, and each day has its special features. This day brought the families and women and children friends of the bride and bridegroom to the temple, the bride leading the procession all curtailed in her cart drawn by two white bullocks. We were told that we could wait and see her descend from her cart, at the temple door, where a stalwart and handsome Hindoo, very much trimmed with gilt braid and wearing a great turban of splendid yellow colors on his head, lifted down the bride, just 16 years old.

He was the proud uncle; and when, on counsel of our guide I approached and asked to meet the little woman of the bullock cart, it was he who granted gracious permission.

A score of women and a dozen men crowded closely about us, the women peering with one eye from under their brilliant saris and showing gorgeous necklaces and bracelets and nose and ear rings as they arranged their draperies with the evident intention to reveal their jewels. The little bride was so hidden by her cloth of gold wrappings that she seemed only a big bronze package on end, and reaching barely above my waistline as I stood beside her.

A request to peep at her face was granted with much laughter and good will by the relatives, and I stooped down and drew apart the cloth, stiff with gold embroidery, and saw a dear little brown face, classic as a cameo—a Greek nose, delicate mouth, white teeth and great dark eyes.

Jewels gleamed in the nostrils, ears and upper lip, and the slender throat wore too many necklaces to count in so brief a moment. This bride was 10 years old, and she was going home from the temple with her husband, an undeveloped lad of 14.

The other bride waiting her turn at the temple door was just five years old and her husband eight. She would not consummate her marriage for five years possibly, though wives at eight and mothers of nine are found in India.

Innumerable instances can be related by those who are in mission or medical work in India of little girls of seven and eight who are actual wives to husbands much older.

The mania of the East Indian mother to marry her daughter young has become insanity. While the better and more educated classes of men are awakened to the evils of this custom and wish to change it, the mothers bar the way.

Should the eight year old husband of five year old bride I saw at the temple door die tomorrow the little wife would be forced by the traditions of her race to live a widow always and devote her life to praying for the dead husband's soul.

The last census reports 1000 widows one year old in India, and 95,000 under ten. The stish government has an understanding with India that it is not to interfere with the religious ideas or the customs of the country.

Yet it was obliged some years ago to interfere with the burning of widows on the husband's funeral pyre and with the destroying of female babies by poor mothers. A judge who administered law for 20 years in India tells of the difficulty with which this dreadful custom was overcome.

The mothers smothered the new-born girl as soon as her sex was known, saying, "Go back and tell your brother to come."

A severe penalty for this crime and continual educational efforts have brought a change. Just so the child marriage and the tradition of enforced widowhood could be made to take their place with the barbarities of a departed era if England would legislate on the important matter.

For it is important. The race is degenerating in physical power and mental force, and the condition of the child mothers and widows of India calls for more than sentimental or charitable interest; it calls for the strong hand of the law to better it.

The brief little hour of glory which the child wife enjoys during the wedding festivities is her one season of triumph. Never after the wedding feast is she permitted to dine at her husband's table even. The high Brahmin will assure you that this is because the Indian so reverences woman—that he gives her seclusion and privacy.

But the reverence which denies woman education and liberty, and condemns her to be always shrouded from view, and to pass her life behind screened windows and high walls—this is not the reverence which woman ought to have from man for the uplifting and betterment of the race. All over the Orient the position occupied by nine-tenths of the women is pitiable and shameful. That they are satisfied and content, like birds born in cages, does not make it less so, but rather more pitiable and more shameful to men.

It is a subject which should be talked about, written about, and discussed everywhere, until the men of the Orient and the ruling powers of other lands awaken to the necessity of changing these antediluvian and worn old ideas to modern and progressive ones.—Copyright by American Journal-Examiner. CITY OFFICIALS STOPPED ON BORDER

Mayor and Assessor Cross River and Get "Almost" Arrested.

Mayor Kelly, city assessor and collector Louis E. Behr and Dr. J. B. Brady narrowly escaped arrest by a United States soldier shortly after 4 o'clock Friday afternoon.

The trio, in company with county judge A. S. J. Eyal and city engineer Herbert Nunn, thinking the swinging bridge too far distant from Madero's camp, walked down to the river and attempted to cross. The first three, with their trousers rolled up and their shoes and stockings off, did cross, but Eyal and Nunn, when halted by the soldier, went back. Kelly told the soldier that he could arrest him if he wished to, but he would not walk back, as it was too far. The private then went for a lieutenant and he said the men should not be arrested.

Archuleta Bound Over to May 5 on Kidnaping Charge.

Whether Ascencion Archuleta is Anacleto Archuleta or not will not be decided until May 5, and in the meantime he must remain in the county jail or furnish $1000 bond.

This action was taken Friday afternoon by Judge A. M. Walthall in the 41st district court because witnesses wanted by the state are suffering from smallpox and cannot be brought into court.

Archuleta was arrested on a warrant charging Anacleto Archuleta with kidnaping Converse and Blatt from the American side of the river near Guadalupe, Mexico. He sought to secure his release Friday on habeas corpus proceedings, but did not succeed. He admitted that he was a Mexican rural, but said he was not the man wanted and was not working on February 22, the day the boys were kidnaped. He
